The Last Enchantment really suffers the most from the fact that it's written from the point of view of a supporting character. Merlin's an epic, iconic figure, but he's not Arthur — and this version emphasises this even more, with Arthur's seemingly endless heroism, patience, temperance and sensitivity.

The last installment in Stewart's Arthurian trilogy was a bit too prosaic for my taste. While some of her interpretations of the legend were very interesting, such as there being two wives named Guinevere... Dare I say it? I found the whole thing downright boring and had to force myself to finish.

The Last Enchantment begins with Arthur established on the throne and takes us through his two marriages to two women named Guinevere. The first one ended in tragedy. The second one, as the story ends, is still in force, even though it has been a lonely one for Guinevere with her husband constantly away from home and on the battlefield.

While this isn't the last of the Arthurian series, it is the end of the Merlin trilogy. This book picks up where The Hollow Hills ends. I liked the more human Arthur (as opposed to the shining king of legend). I also like how he matures and grows into the king Merlin believed he could be.

I first read Mary Stewart's Merlin Trilogy—The Crystal Cave (1970), The Hollow Hills (1973), and The Last Enchantment (1979)—and the follow-up book The Wicked Day (1983) in 1986 when I was fifteen. I had already read Sidney Lanier's The Boy's King Arthur and some children's versions of the Arthurian legend, but this was the first novel series I read.
