Fortunately, it is very simple to build these amplifier circuits when good tube circuits and good output trans-formers are available. In fact, I did all this research to design a special series of new toroidal output transformers, the so-called "specialist" series. Figure 2 shows the schematic of the tube amplifier I used for all the tests.

The tetrodes used in the main amplifier section are four Electro-Harmonix 6V6EH tubes, which are pretty easy to find. For the preamp tubes, we have two 5965 tubes which are double triodes, meaning each tube actually contains two triodes. If you look at the guts of the tube you will notice two separate metal sheaths; these are the triodes.
